1. Connect the USBPre 2

Before connecting the USBPre 2, quit all open applications that use audio. An application that is running on the computer when the USBPre 2 is connected may not recognize the USBPre 2 until the application is restarted.

To connect the USBPre 2:

1. Attach the USB A end of the supplied USB A-to USB B cable to an available USB port on the computer.
2. Attach the USB B end of the cable to the USB B port on the right panel of the USB Pre 2.

The USBPre 2's meter LEDs will illuminate sequentially, indicating the USBPre 2 is connected and booting up properly.

3. Ensure that the operating system has recognized the USBPre 2 and designated the USBPre 2 as the default sound card.

Mac OS

When connecting the USBPre 2 to a computer with OS X 10.5 or earlier installed, hold down the Input 1 Source Select button while plugging in the USB cable to the USBPre 2. This will cause the USBPre 2 to initialize in USB Full speed mode, which is required for OS X 10.5 and earlier.

Windows OS

The USBPre 2 is an Audio Device Class USB standard peripheral. No proprietary drivers are required to operate the USBPre 2 under Windows. The first time the USBPre 2 is plugged in, Windows will install standard USB Audio Device Class drivers automatically.

For more information regarding different operating systems and drivers, such as the ASIO driver which enables higher sampling rates on Windows computers, see the USBPre 2 User Guide.

Linux OS

No proprietary drivers are required to operate the USBPre 2 under Linux. The first time the USBPre 2 is plugged in, Linux will enable standard USB Audio Device Class drivers automatically (if necessary).

Current Linux audio drivers only support USB audio devices at “Full speed” USB rates. The USBPre 2 must be forced into Full Speed mode by holding down the Input 1 Source Select button when plugging in the USB cable to the USBPre 2.

2. Connect an Audio Source

Located on the left panel of the USBPre 2, there are two active-balanced XLR-3F connectors for low impedance microphone-level inputs.

To connect an audio source:

- Use a standard XLR cable and connect a microphone-level analog source to MIC 1 or MIC 2 inputs.

On the left panel of the USBPre 2, there are also two ¼-inch TRS inputs for balanced line-level signals, and two AUX inputs that accept consumer-level inputs from devices such as CD players, camcorders, DVD players, etc.

3. Connect Headphones

Located on the right panel of the USBPre 2, there are two outputs (3.5 mm and ¼-inch TRS) for low-impedance headphones.

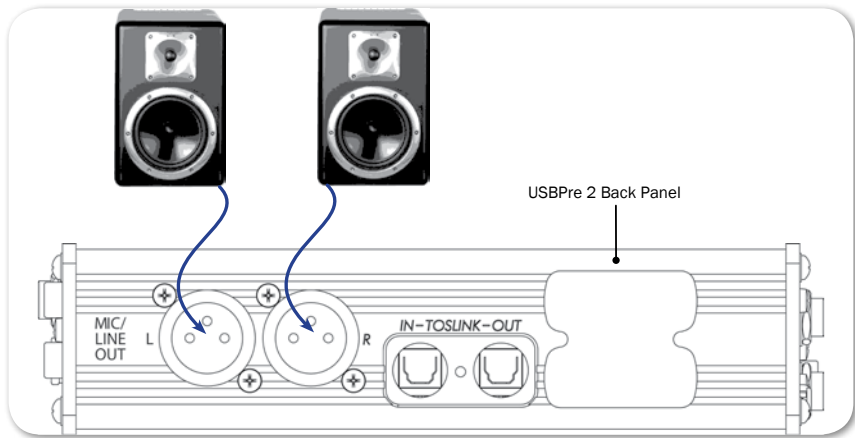

To connect headphones:

- ▶ Plug in the headphones cable to either of the headphone outputs on the USBPre 2.

⚠ The USBPre 2 can drive headphones to dangerously loud levels. Take care when attaching headphones and when setting the headphone level.

Powered Monitors

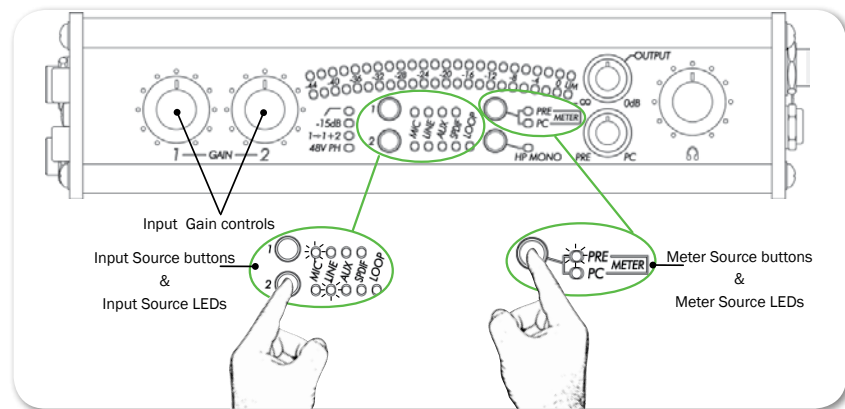

Depending on the type of connection, powered monitors with balanced analog inputs can also be attached to the USBPre 2, via auxiliary outputs (RCA connectors), located on the right panel or the active-balanced analog XLR outputs, located on the back panel of the USBPre 2.

4. Select Input Type

To select input type:

1. Repeatedly press the Input Source button on the front panel of the USBPre 2 until the proper Input Source LED illuminates for the input you will be recording. As shown in the following illustration, Input 1 is set to MIC, while Input 2 is set to LINE.

2. If the PRE Meter Source LED is not illuminated, press the Meter Source button to change the meter source to display input levels.
3. For analog input sources, adjust the Input Gain control corresponding to the input being recorded. The meters will show the audio level of the inputs.

ⓘ Input Gain controls do not affect digital input levels.

Make certain that the USBPre 2 is selected as the input and output device in the audio application's preferences. Consult your application's documentation for further information. For more details on using a USBPre 2, see the USBPre 2 User Guide.
